CHAP. 4. This statute did not extend to the province, but the provisions which it contained were nearly similar to those in the act of 1715, Ch. 28, for taking special bail in the several counties, &c. except the 4th section of the statute which made it felony for any person to be bail in another's name. There had been acts of assembly respecting bail in 1696, 1676, 1674 and 1663.

CHAP. 8. Although there were a few cases of prosecutions for robbery on the highway, the evils stated in the preamble to this statute did not exist in the province, and the statute never extended thereto.

CHAP. 21. This statute does not appear to have been practised under in the province, but writs have been issued in every case, so that a defendant has been returned, taken, on the first writ, and "not found" on the second, in case of his having given bail to the first.
