The Department of Transportation was created in 1970 (Chapter 526, Acts of 1970), but the State's concern with transportation dates back to the early nineteenth century. In that period, the State helped finance various "internal improvements," including railroads, canals, and turnpikes. State agencies specifically vested with responsibilities for transportation are, however, a product of the twentieth century. The State Roads Commission was established in 1908, the Motor Vehicle Commission in 1910, the State Aviation Commission in 1929, the Maryland Port Authority in 1956, the Mass Transit Administration in 1970, and the State Railroad Administration in 1978.

Under direction of the Secretary, the Department of Transportation consolidates seven administrations: the State Highway Administration, the State Railroad Administration, the Maryland Port Administration, the Motor Vehicle Administration, the Mass Transit Administration, the State Aviation Administration, and the Maryland Transportation Authority. Providing the Secretary with advice, guidance, and direction in a variety of transportation matters are the Maryland Transportation Commission, the Board of Review, the Transportation Professional Services Selection Board, the Board of Airport Zoning Appeals, and the State Roads Commission (Code Transportation Article, secs. 2-101 through 2-103).

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

The Secretary of Transportation heads the Department. Reporting directly to the Secretary are the Deputy Secretary, the Assistant Secretaries for Administration and Management Studies, and three Offices: Policy and Program Analysis; Financial Planning and Budget; and Transportation Planning. The Secretary also chairs the Maryland Transportation Authority and the Maryland Port Commission and serves on the Transportation Professional Services Selection Board (Code Transportation Article, sec. 2-102).

The Department of Transportation administers the State Highway Safety Program and the Secretary of Transportation is the Governor's Highway Safety Representative. The Governor's powers and authority for the Program have been redelegated by the Secretary to the Office of Transportation Planning (Code Transportation Article, secs. 2-401 through 2-409).
