The Mid-Atlantic Fishery Management Council was established in 1976 in accordance with the Federal Fishery Conservation and Management Act of 1976, as amended. The act gives the United States exclusive management authority over fisheries (except for highly migratory species of tuna) within a fishery conservation zone of 3 to 200 miles offshore. For both domestic and foreign fisheries, the law was enacted to ensure sound fishery conservation and management measures.

The Mid-Atlantic Council is one of eight regional fishery management councils established as planning units to carry out provisions of the federal act. Each council prepares fishery management plans for implementation by the U.S. Secretary of Commerce.

With a total of twenty-three members, the Mid-Atlantic Council is made up of representatives from Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. Nineteen voting members include the Regional Director, National Marine Fisheries Service; a state fisheries official from each state; and twelve public members selected by the U.S. Secretary of Commerce upon nomination by the state governors. Public members serve three-year terms. Four nonvoting members represent the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service; U.S. Coast Guard; U.S. Department of State; and Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission.
