A full set of plans of the Hall of Records is on file with the Chairman of the Archival Buildings Committee of the Society of American Archivists. Another set may be consulted at the Hall of Records or borrowed for short periods. The volume of Specifications for Hall of Records for the State of Maryland, prepared by the architect for the use of construction bidders, may also be consulted at the Hall of Records. Reduced plans may be found along with five photographs of interior and exterior views in an article prepared by the architect, Laurence Hall Fowler, in The Architectural Record Vol. 79, (1936), pp. 194-197.

It is difficult to know what items of equipment should be mentioned in the description of an archival establishment. For the purposes of this report typewriters, filing cabinets, furniture and other items to be found in any office will be omitted. No heating plant was installed since heat and hot water are furnished by the State power plant in Annapolis. The air-conditioning unit is a Sirocco System No. 820 and was manufactured by the American Blower Company of Detroit, Michigan. There was no photographic equipment except that belonging to the Land Office although the dark room had been prepared by the installation of basins, outlets and other such permanent fixtures. The elevator of 1,500 pound capacity and the two dumb-waiters were manufactured by the General Elevator Company. The watch system is based on a Holtzer Magneto Clock Time Detector System. The inter-office telephone of twelve outlets was manufactured by Holtzer-Cabot, Boston, Massachusetts. The stack area contained a library shelf system manufactured by Sned and Company, and about one-third of the shelves had been installed before occupancy of the building. There were several large office safes for the use of the repair and photographic departments.

Perhaps a word should be said of the furniture. There are many antique pieces purchased for the State in order to harmonize with the building and some of the flooring was taken from old buildings. The utilitarian office furniture was especially designed for this building. The whole effect of the interior is considered to be one of the most attractive features of the Hall of Records.
