

altered to suit present purposes. Cost, including the alteration, $100,000. It is managed by five trustees, who, at present are William Dickinson, John King, Matthew Bennet, Samuel Rankin.

Arcades.—The Arcades now in use, are two in number, viz the Maryland Arcade, extending from Market Space to Frederick street, between Second and Water streets, and the Lexington Arcade, near the Lexington Market. In both are sold dry-goods, toys, fancy articles, &c.

Armistead Monument.—This is placed in a Gothic niche, behind the Calvert street City Spring. It was erected to the memory of Col. George Armistead, as a tribute of gratitude and respect from his fellow-citizens, for his gallant defence of Fort McHenry, Sept. 13, 1814.

Arsenal.—Seven miles from Baltimore, at a little village called Pikesville, on the route of the Reisterstown turnpike, is situated a United States Arsenal; a small, but commodious establishment, very well adapted to the purpose.

Bath House.—The Colonade Baths are situated in Saratoga street, between Calvert and North streets. This establishment has been fitted up with taste and elegance, but seems not to receive the encouragement it deserves.

Battle Monument.—This elegant structure is placed in Monument Square. It commemorates the battle of North Point and the bombardment of Fort McHenry. It is of white marble, adorned with suitable devices of exquisite workmanship, and surmounted by a statue representing the presiding divinity of Baltimore. It was designed by Maximilian Godefroy. The sculpture is by Signior Capellano, an Italian artist.

Bazaar.—The Bazaar runs from Harrison street to the Falls, a little north of Baltimore street. It is divided into a number of stalls for the sale of dry goods, groceries, fancy articles, china and glass ware, &c. It was built by Mr. Jacob Daley, and cost $28,000.

City Hall.—This is a very plain building, but well suited to the purpose to which it is now applied. It was formerly Peale's Museum, and is situated in Holliday street, a little south of Saratoga. This building was purchased by the City from the stockholders of the Museum, and cost $10,000, including the necessary alterations. It contains the offices of the Mayor, Register, City Commissioners and Port Wardens, Commissioners of Health and City Collector; also, the halls appropriated to the City Council, which are on the second floor and exceedingly handsome and suitable apartments.

Court House.—Is situated at the corner of Lexington street and Monument Square, nearly in the centre of the twelve wards. This edifice is of brick, ornamented with pilasters of the Ionic order. Being on the edge of a declivity, the base in front is elevated ten or twelve feet above the level of Monument Square. A paved court yard surrounds the building. The Court House was much injured by fire in 1834, but it is now restored to its for-

Exchange.—The Baltimore Exchange is a large and tasteful edifice in Gay street extending from Second to Water streets.
