

though this position brought to an end her actual teaching in the day school, yet work in the night school for a number of years, kept alive her interest in this line of work and enabled her to retain the skill which her course in training had given her.

The foregoing are the main incidents of Miss Smith's life briefly put. Much could be said that would enable one to have a more intimate knowledge of the woman herself. For instance, a mention of her attendance at such summer schools as Hampton, Howard University and the Rochester Business Institute, would at once bespeak her general desire for improvement and her ambition to keep abreast of the times in that particular field in which she has elected to work. Her interest in humanity is attested to by activity in such organizations as the Day Nursery Association, the Y. W. C. A., the Empty Stocking and Fresh Air Circle, the Woman's Auxiliary to the Maryland Home for Friendless Colored Children, the Woman's Co-operative Civic League, and others that are less well known. In a word, Miss Smith, from a little rural maiden, has developed into a woman cultivated, broad, interested in all movements for good and a living force with both old and young, in the community of which she is a well-known member.
