

JULIUS S. CARROLL.

Julius S. Carroll, pastor of Centennial Methodist Episcopal Church, is the son of the late Rev. Henry A. Carroll, who for a number of years was a prominent member of the Washington Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Rev. Carroll was born in Baltimore. He attended the public schools of Alexandria, Va., and Washington, D. C. He also attended Howard University. In 1901 he graduated from Morgan College with the degree of Bachelor of Arts and in 1906 from Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J., with the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. Rev. Carroll also graduated from the Theological Department of Morgan College. While pursuing the course at Drew Theological Seminary Rev. Carroll had charge of a mission work in New York City. He has served both in the country and the city. La Plata, Holly Run and Hullsville, and Chase Circuits had him as their pastor. He served as pastor also at Sparrows Point, Maryland; Wheeling, West Va.; Charleston, West Va., where a beautiful church was erected during his pastorate, and Clarksburg, West Va. Rev. Carroll is now serving his second year at Centennial Church. It is quite a coincidence that forty odd years ago Rev. Henry A. Carroll was pastor of Centennial Church, the church then being called Dallas Street, and for four years prior to Rev. Julius Carroll's coming to Centennial his uncle, the Rev. N. M. Carroll, D. D., was pastor of the church.

In 1905 Rev. Carroll married Miss Florence May Dungee, a teacher in the Baltimore Public Schools and who is a graduate of Howard University with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Mrs. Carroll has shown her adaptability in the sphere of a minister's wife by the able manner in which she works in her husband's church and the community. In 1916 Mrs. Carroll represented the Washington Conference Woman's Missionary Society at the national meeting of the society at Columbus, Ohio.
