

No branch of trade in our city has so rapidly increased as the Tobacco trade, principally from the west by the Ohio and Susquehanna Rail Roads, and Tide Water Canal. A large warehouse was added last year, and now a much larger one is being erected on Charles street, south of Pratt; in the meantime, nearly every warehouse and shed suitable for storing it, has more or less tobacco in it.

Our march is onward, steadily and surely. Who will say what a city ours is destined to be, and where can the next hundred years place our limits?

805