PREFACE

The compilation of this bibliography was aided by many libraries. The Maryland Historical Society in Baltimore was very helpful. At the Library of Congress, the staff of the Union Catalog was most cooperative. The aid of Mr. Myron C. Getchell who directed the thesis was invaluable, and the help of Dom Bernard Theall was greatly appreciated.

INTRODUCTION

It is the purpose of this dissertation to present in catalog form a record of the output of the Maryland Press from 1870 through 1871.

The "American Imprints Inventory" checked the libraries and private collections throughout the United States in order to record the product of the printing presses. This inventory provides the basis of the list of publications contained in this bibliography.

This bibliography of imprints includes all the Inventory-reported titles and locations and the titles and locations found in the National Union Catalog of the Library of Congress. As titles are constantly being discovered no one list at this time can be said to be complete.

A short background history of the state of Maryland between 1870 and 1871, the time covered by the imprints, has been included. A brief account of the history of printing at this time is given.

The bibliography is arranged chronologically. Within each year, the arrangement is by author and title. Symbols, which represent different libraries, follow the presentation of the bibliographical information about each imprint. The Library of Congress Catalog rules have been followed.

Through an examination of the titles published during this period in Maryland, it is possible to obtain a clear picture of the characteristics of printing in this state. It is hoped that this dissertation will be a contribution to the much larger survey of printing in the entire United States, which began with the "American Imprints Inventory."

CHAPTER I

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF THE IMPRINTS

From 1864 to 1870 the problem of post-war readjustment was uppermost in the minds of Marylanders. Maryland, as a border state, furnished soldiers to both the North and South during the Civil War, and as an active participant in the war, felt keenly the distress that followed Appomattox. There was a tremendous feeling of relief in the state after the peace, which expressed itself in the elections. Unprecedented majorities were recorded for those who represented the restoration of popular government. In January, 1868, what has been called the politically unanimous Assembly began the session.

This restoration of popular government in Maryland was accomplished by men who previously had been sharply divided over sectional issues. For a while, it seemed that the bitterness of the war had been forgotten, but partisanshism, promoted by extremists on either side, soon came to the front. "The years of 1868 to 1870 marked in a way the end of one era and the beginning of a new era."¹ This new era ushered in a period in which Maryland's prosperity reached a very high peak.

Politically, the 1870's were a period dominated exclusively by transportation interests. Many prominent men turned to railroad careers as a means of obtaining power. High fees were paid to lawyers by the railroads to protect their interests. William Evarts was one such lawyer. John W. Garrett, whose name appears in much of the material published in the 1870's, was one of the outstanding railroad figures who also wielded powerful political influence. He became president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad in 1858 and continued in this capacity until his death in 1884. James T. Clark and Arthur Pue Gorman of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company were two other figures in the transportation world who were also active in politics.

Arthur Pue Gorman of Howard County came openly into the political world in 1869 along with Freeman Rasin of Baltimore. Both men wielded exceptional power as bosses or managers in the majority party. Arthur Pue Gorman was the holder of state and national offices and Rasin was the power behind the scenes, who for many years held visible or invisible control of the political arena in the center of population which was Baltimore. In 1870, Bowie was governor of Maryland, but in 1871 William Pinkney Whyte was nominated by the Democrats for governor, and, supported by Gorman, came into office. Governor Whyte secured the support of Gorman by removing James T. Clark from the presidency of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company and putting the man from Howard County in his place. On the whole, Whyte made a good governor, but his use of patronage for personal advantages caused him many enemies, among whom was Severn Teackle Wallis, a prominent reformer. Banks was mayor of Baltimore in the 1870's.

Economically, as well as politically, Maryland was dominated by the transportation interests. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, under the control of John W. Garrett, began a tremendous period of expansion from 1858 until 1884; interrupted only by the Civil War. "Of the old order of the large men of the Baltimore and Ohio, he was the last. And the greatest. For twenty-six years he ruled the road as its president with an iron hand. Until it became known colloquially as 'Garrett's road'..."² In no field was the postwar business boom more evident than in unprecedented railroad building activity which followed the driving of the last spike in the transcontinental railway on May 10, 1869, in Utah.

Other transportation companies played an important part in the economic life of Maryland. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad was begun in 1867 and operated between Baltimore and Washington and Upper Marlboro in the summer of 1871. The Western Maryland Railroad, with the beginning of its operation, opened up the coal fields and iron mines of this section of the state. There was much opposition to new railroads opening lines by the older railroads, such as the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which much preferred to maintain a monopoly on the railroad traffic. Governor Bowie, in his annual message to the legislature of Maryland in 1870, came to the defense of the small lines. In his message he said that he "favored construction of all roads and canals which can be built in Maryland ... and favored their independent operation after they are built."³ Governor Bowie thought that the railroads should be used to help the people of the state in every way possible. He said that southern Maryland should not be forgotten and that the Baltimore and Potomac should be constructed to take care of this section of the country. Governor Bowie also at this time urged the Maryland legislature to pass a free railroad law under which the citizens might be enabled to build railroads whenever capital could be secured for this purpose.

The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company was at the height of its power in 1870 and 1871. Coal from the mountains of Maryland was being sent down the canal by barges to Washington. The railroads, at this time, were not hurting the canal hauling of heavy commodities. Under James T. Clark and Arthur P. Gorman the Canal Company flourished. In a late February issue of the Baltimore Sun, considerable space was given to an article about the locks being repaired and fitted up for spring use. During March, 1871, along 545 boats were cleared through the canal. They carried 60,049 tons of coal, 127 tons of fire brick, 5000 feet of lumber and six tons of sundries.⁴ The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company was an important factor in the economic life of Maryland in the 1870's.

Despite the importance of the transportation interest in the economic life of Maryland, agriculture, fishing, and shipping provided occupations for a good part of the population. Agriculture was aided by the State Department of Agriculture and such associations as the State Agricultural and Mechanical Association. The latter was started in 1867 and was in active operation in 1870 and 1871 having as its purpose the advancement of all agricultural and mechanical interests of the state. There was a variety of agricultural production. Tobacco, fruits, and cereals were important. Fishing was as important to Marylanders in the 1870's as it is today. In 1868 the long continued attempts to protect or regulate the fishing industry were started. In regard to the shipping interests of Marylanders, one has only to glance at any copy of the Baltimore Sun to see what an important part the shipping industry played in Baltimore at least. The papers are filled with the coming and going of ships from abroad.

Maryland was rich in her mineral deposits, and mining and manufacturing establishments played a part in her economic life. Large quarries of marble, granite, and limestone, and banks of iron ore and sandstone existed.⁵

Socially, Maryland in 1870 was looking forward to a new epoch. The situation in regard to different races within the state was a vital one. The Negro question was a bitter source of contention. Gov. Bowie in his annual message to the Maryland legislature in January, 1870, voiced the opinion that the Negro because of lack of education, and for various other reasons, was not qualified to vote. Despite the Governor's objections, however, the Negro in Maryland made his appearance as a rather influential segment of the voting population in the 1871 election. Before the Civil War, most of the white population of Maryland had consisted of North European stock; after the Civil War great encouragement was given to the South European emigrant to come to the state. Efforts were made to make Baltimore rival New York in providing space for the emigrant. Mayor Banks of Baltimore, in a speech in July, 1870, said that 18,000 emigrants left Liverpool in the month of July, 1870, for America.⁶ While the English and North European migration continued, it was beginning to be outnumbered by the south European movement. The Germans formed quite a section of the population in Baltimore. When the Franco-Prussian War broke in 1870, there were demonstrations by Germans in Baltimore who were anxious to see their home land win.

Maryland in 1870 and 1871 was busy in opening and continuing in operation institutions, hospitals, and homes for the less fortunate members of her state. Maryland possessed a State Hospital for the Mentally Ill, a School for the Deaf and Dumb at Frederick, a School for the Blind, and the Eye and Ear Institute in Baltimore. Homes were operated for orphans and old people. The St. Mary's Industrial School for Boys and the Boys' Home helped to care for the children and young people. The House of Refuge in Baltimore cared for the aged. The Maryland Industrial School for Girls had a farm of fifty-six acres outside of Baltimore and provided care and education for girls.

In the educational world St. John's College and the University of Maryland were in operation. Increasing interest in public schools was leading to a better school system. Gov. Bowie was very much interested in providing better schools for children. He recognized the fact that good Normal Schools for the training of teachers was a necessity. A State Board of Education was organized, as being preferable to putting everything into one person's hands. The Roman Catholic Church ran schools of its own in Maryland. There were also numerous "academies for young ladies" and other private schools and colleges. On the whole, Maryland seemed to be well provided with schools. The Maryland Historical Society was well organized and doing a great deal to preserve and advance knowledge in the 1870's. The Peabody Institute in Baltimore, founded by the noted philanthropist, George Peabody, was giving lectures on different subjects of interest to the people. These lectures were listed in the Baltimore papers.

Libraries, as a part of the intellectual life of the state, were receiving a great deal of attention. In fact, article 7 of the Maryland constitution specifically provides for a state library:

It shall be the duty of the legislature at its first session after the adoption of this constitution to pass a law regulating the mode and manner in which the books in the library shall be kept and accounted for by the librarian, and requiring the librarian to give bond, etc. for proper discharge of his duties.⁷

Governor Bowie in 1870 said that the Maryland state library was anything but a credit to the state. He suggested to the legislature that proper provision and proper appropriation for the purchase of books should be made by the legislature so that the library could become a real asset. Henry A. Silver was the state librarian in 1870. Dr. R. P. Uler headed the Peabody Institute Library. The different colleges and universities possessed libraries of varying size.

Maryland has always been a strong center of religious activity and in 1870 and 1871, the Episcopalian and Methodist Episcopal Churches held conferences in Baltimore. The Baptist and Presbyterian Churches also maintained influential positions. Founded by Roman Catholics, Maryland remained in the 1870's strongly Roman Catholic, with Martin John Spalding as Archbishop of Baltimore. A list of the publications in the state for this period reflects the strong religious interest of the people.

In this two year period of 1870 through 1871, the state of Maryland completed her recovery from the Civil War. The people united in efforts to increase their prestige and prosperity. Politically, economically, and socially, it was an age of transition. A new economy and a new social order were arising. Maryland faced the last thirty years of the nineteenth century with confidence and hope.

CHAPTER II

HISTORY OF MARYLAND PRINTING 1870-71

In 1870 and 1871 Maryland publishing was carried on by numerous houses - over 75 in number. The center of the publishing industry was in Baltimore which was the seat of population. There were, however, other cities where printing took place. Annapolis, the state capital, had three publishing houses, that did much of the printing of state papers, George Colton and Son, William Thompson, and Iglohart. William Thompson published in 1870 the annual report of the adjutant general of Maryland. In Hagerstown, Robertson and John Gruber and Company operated two of the printing establishments. Frederick, Maryland, did much of its own printing through the Citizen's Print. Baltimore, Annapolis, Hagerstown, and Frederick were the principal cities in the publishing field.

In Baltimore, where the houses were so numerous, the printers started to specialize in certain areas of publishing. Because of the large German population, publishing houses operated that specialized in publications in German. Three of the better known houses were Kroh, Fischer und Roemaler, and Kenzer.

The 1870's in Maryland were years of strong religious interest. Many publishers concentrated on printing for religious organizations. Kelly, Piet and Company was noted for its output of Roman Catholic works. George Lycett operated an Episcopal Church Book Store and did much of the Church's publishing. F. A. Hanzche Steam Press was the Evangelical Lutheran Church's agent. In Baltimore, J. Westley Smith and Brothers were the official publishers for the Methodist Church. All of these presses, of course, did other types of printing, but specialized in religious works.

Beside the publishers in Annapolis who issued state papers, King Brothers in Baltimore were the official state publishers. Cushings and Bailey put out a number of law books. Murphy and Company also was actively engaged in the legal document field. Kelly, Piet and Company were the principal city printers for Baltimore.

While the book publishing trade lacked to a great extent the highly commercialized system of advertising which it now possesses, the large houses put out annotated lists of books in the local papers. In the Baltimore Sun on March 7, 1871, Kelly Piet and Company listed the books which it had just published. There were just brief annotations, but long enough to interest the reader in the book.

The output of the Maryland presses in 1870 and 1871 was an accurate reflection of the chief interests of the people. The publishers made a good recovery from the unfortunate disruption resulting from the Civil War, and benefited from the post-war prosperity in the state. New companies took over where old ones left off. William K. Boyle was the successor to John D. Toy in Baltimore.

Maryland imprints of 1870 and 1871 can roughly be divided into the following classifications:

1. Official state and city publications and legal documents.
2. Publications of religious organizations.
3. Publications of transportation interests.
4. General literature: Music, drama, fiction, poetry, histories, etc.

All in all, the publishing of these two years covered a very wide field in a short space of time. With Baltimore as its center of publication, Maryland in 1870 was taking a prominent place in the history of printing.

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION

This bibliography is certainly not to be regarded as an all-inclusive and complete listing of Maryland imprints for 1870-71. Other titles will be discovered later. However, at the present moment, this is the final result.

The two years of 1870-71 were fruitful ones for the Maryland printing trade. Nine hundred and forty-six entries are included in this survey. Seventy-six publishing houses put out all of the material.

The publishing industry was centered in Baltimore; the largest city in Maryland. Sixty-seven out of the seventy-six houses were located there. Annapolis, Frederick, and Hagerstown were the only other cities of any size engaged in publishing.

The libraries of Maryland, of course, have collected the greatest number of these imprints. The Maryland Historical Society of Baltimore, where many of the books listed in this bibliography were examined, has a large percentage. The Library of Congress also possesses many of the titles as part of its rich store of Americana. There are also a number of them scattered over many of the states.

It is possible to obtain an insight into the chief interests of the people through a view of their literary output. Religion was one of the dominating themes in their lives. There was an increasing interest, however, in the lighter fields of literature with the publication of novels and plays. The rapid rise of the railroads; with the accompanying increasing power of their officers in the economic and political life of the state, is also reflected in the large number of official railroad publications and in the personal speeches and addresses of railroad officials.
