INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this dissertation is the compilation of a check list of essential printed materials of fundamental value from 1875 through 1945. The work covers the period from the first year of the publication of the first issue of the Library of Congress Catalog to the present time.

PREFACE

The author wishes to express his appreciation to the following individuals for their assistance in the preparation of this work:

Grateful acknowledgement is here made to all those who have been helpful in the compilation of this work.

I express my sincere appreciation to the librarians who so graciously cooperated in supplying needed information.

INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this dissertation is the compilation of a check list of the material printed in the State of Maryland from 1874 through 1876. The primary source material has been a part of the records collected by the American Imprints Inventory, covering library holdings throughout the United States. In addition, the list contains all the titles and locations found in the National Union Catalog, in national, Maryland and special bibliographies, in the Maryland Historical Society, and in other libraries of Baltimore, Maryland. When it was thought necessary letters were sent to holding libraries in order to complete missing bibliographical information.

A brief historical sketch of the social, political, and economic conditions under which the printing was done, is presented in the first chapter. Sketches of the principal printers of this period are given in the second chapter.

The imprints are arranged chronologically and under each year alphabetically. If the author is not known, or if there is no author the title serves as main entry. The present location of these items is also noted, and the key to the libraries has been taken from Symbols Used in the Union Catalog of the Library of Congress, fifth edition, 1953. The index which follows the check list is arranged alphabetically according to author and title.

The products of this period in Maryland history has not been available formerly. It is hoped that this information concerning locations of primary source material will be a contribution to the survey of printing in the United States.

CHAPTER I

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF THE PERIOD

At the close of the Civil War large fortunes were accumulated in the city of Baltimore, the center for activities of Maryland. The trade and commerce of Baltimore in 1874 was a picture of the city's prosperity. In other parts of the country, there was a depression in trade and manufacturers, being a natural reaction from previous speculation and over production. Although there was no actual monetary panic, the national financial problem held capital from active operation to an extent that all business was somewhat curtailed.¹

In Baltimore, as in the country at large, there was a decrease in the value of imports, while there was an increase in the value of exports, which was a favorable indication of the lessening of foreign balance against the United States. The abundant harvest in this country and a drought in Europe, made it possible for the U. S. to export a large amount of breadstuffs. This export trade was an important element for withstanding the shrinkage of value and depression in general business following the previous year's panic.²

The Baltimore ship channel, twenty miles from Baltimore on the Patapsco River, was completed in July 1874. This channel upon which the future prosperity of the city depended to a great degree gave the needed avenue for steamships of the largest size to approach and depart from this port.³ The ship channel and the great railroad lines connecting Baltimore with St. Louis, Chicago, and California gave this city the great grain trade.

For many years Baltimore had been next to New York in the importation of coffee. With the steamers coming into the Baltimore port, it was hoped that the traffic in coffee with the East and West Indies would place Baltimore even with

New York in the import of coffee. There was a large decrease in the import of clothes, in soda, in tin plates, in salts, and in fancy goods. The greatest increase was in fancy silks.⁴

Of the exports from Baltimore, the chief articles were corn, wheat, petroleum, bacon, lard, and tobacco. There were also large shipments of corn meal, coal, cotton, cloverseed, rosin, butter, cheese, and pork. The export of petroleum was about double that of 1873.⁵

During this period, special efforts were made toward the education of the freedman, and in 1874 an act was passed for the establishment of a normal school for the training of Negroes; there were continued attempts made to protect or regulate the fishing industry, to improve the roads, restrict local liquor laws, and to make laws to improve election procedure, especially with a view of securing bipartisan guardianship of the polls. Also bills were passed for the establishment of a House of Correction and the State Board of Health.⁶

On October 25, 1875, the new city hall of Baltimore - one of the finest structures of its kind in the country - was appropriately dedicated. The building is built of brick, faced on all sides with white marble, quarried in Baltimore County. Mr. George A. Frederick, of Baltimore, was the architect. The construction took eight years and the cost was over two and a quarter millions of dollars.⁷ A year later the Johns Hopkins University was opened. This institution was established in accordance with the will of Johns Hopkins, a wealthy citizen of Baltimore, who died in 1873 and left a bequest of six millions of dollars to found a university and a hospital. The hospital buildings were completed some years later. A home for colored children was also included in the provisions of Mr. Hopkins will.⁸

The foundation established under the bequest of Johns Hopkins was perhaps the greatest single outgrowth of the true University idea in America since the founding of the University of Virginia by Thomas Jefferson. The plan as developed by Daniel C. Gilman, its first president, brought together a staff of the greatest specialist in each department of research. With a faculty chosen to give to America the kind of scholarship which had formerly been sought abroad, the University was opened in October, 1876, with a group of eighty-nine students.⁹

Despite the prejudice against biology, Gilman invited Huxley to give the address on the formal opening of the University on October 3rd, 1876. There was no prayer at the meeting and some of the Baltimore people were very critical. The University became a pioneer in higher education through its success in the encouragement of original research.¹⁰

By a resolution of the General Assembly in 1876, the great seal of the state was altered so as to conform to the seal furnished the province in 1648, by Lord Baltimore. The first great seal of Maryland was brought over by Leonard Calvert in 1634, and was taken from the province by Richard Ingle during the Clairborne rebellion. In 1648, Lord Baltimore issued a new seal, which was lost or stolen during the government of Cromwell's Commissioners. Another was sent over in 1658, and was used until 1726 when a different seal was substituted. In 1765 the former seal was again adopted and was in use, with some modifications, until the original was restored by an act of the Assembly. The seal is kept in the executive chamber of the State-house at Annapolis.¹¹

As to the political history of this period, the Legislature assembled January 7th, 1874, and elected John Lee Carroll of Howard County, president of the Senate, and Jesse K. Hines, of Kent County, as speaker of the House of Delegates. Governor William Pinkney Whyte was elected United States Senator, for the term beginning March 4th, 1875, and on the 27th resigned the office of Governor. James Black Groome, a member of the House of Delegates from Cecil, resigned his seat on February 4th and was elected governor to fill the unexpired term of Governor Whyte.

During Whyte's term as governor he had made appointments which he hoped would strengthen his chances of getting the nomination for senator. The Governor had such complete control of the city and state members that when the Legislature met in 1874, he was unanimously nominated to succeed William T. Hamilton, the incumbent. Hamilton's name was not considered and from that date on he was a political enemy of Whyte. He had a strong following of independent democrats and disgruntled party members and tried to acquire the nomination for governor of Maryland in the state convention held in July, 1875.¹²

The three major gubernatorial nominees for governor of Maryland in July, 1875, were Mr. William T. Hamilton, Governor James Blake Groome, and Mr. John Lee Carroll. Governor Groome later withdrew and his name was not presented at the convention. Gorman, president of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, appointed by Governor Whyte, and Masin, clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, supported John Lee Carroll who received the nomination. The Hamilton men had fought hard but were defeated when under Gorman's direction some of their men were unseated by the Committee on Credentials.¹³ The election for mayor of Baltimore in October, 1875, was a very spirited contest, and resulted in the election of Ferdinand C. Latrobe, Democrat, over Henry M. Warfield, the candidate of the reform party.

The general election on November 2, for Governor, Attorney General, Comptroller of the Treasury, and members of the Legislature, was one of the most contested political elections ever held in Maryland. Great frauds were alleged and the election was contested before the Legislature of 1876, which decided that the Democratic candidates were duly elected.¹⁴ Maryland elected six Democratic United States Representatives to the forty-fourth Congress. The political battle of 1875 proved to be the beginning of opposition to the party machine which had been in power for the last quarter of a century.

At the presidential election on November 7, 1876, the Democratic electors were elected by 19, 799 majority, to vote for Messrs. Samuel A. Tilden of New York and Thomas A. Hendricks of Indiana, being 91,780, against 71,981, for Messrs. R. B. Hayes of Ohio and William A. Wheeler of New York, the Republican candidates.¹⁵

An issue of major importance in Maryland in 1874 was the proposed settlement of the boundary line between Maryland and Virginia and its effect on fishing rights. In September, 1874, there occurred an incident known as the "Oyster War." A Maryland oysterman was shot by a Virginia oyster inspector in Pocomoke Sound near the debatable line. At the last session of the Legislature in Maryland, a law was passed which stated that Virginia had declared her willingness to submit the boundary question to arbitration by a committee of three, Honorable William A. Graham of North Carolina, and a third person to be selected by them. At the time of the shooting, the "high joint commission" had not completed its work.¹⁶ On December 3rd, 1874, the Governor of Virginia recommended the passage of an act extending to citizens of Maryland the privilege of taking oysters in all waters claimed by both states, but extending such privileges until the true line of boundary should be finally ascertained.¹⁷

On January 16, 1877, the commission appointed by the two states to settle the dispute made their report. The right of Maryland to the whole of the Potomac River was confirmed, but the question of the right to the territory between the two branches of the river was not broached, that being now occupied by West Virginia.¹⁸

OUTSTANDING PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS

With the mechanization of printing in the 1860's, the volume of printed material increased with the gradual change-over in the types of press. In the period 1874-76, the greatest per cent of the printing and publishing was done in Baltimore, with Annapolis, Frederick, Hagerstown, Cumberland, Woodstock, Westminster, and Taneytown publishing a small percentage of the output. Some of the outstanding printers and publishers in Baltimore were the following:

In January, 1876, The Sun Job Printing Establishment was advertised as the largest printing house in Baltimore, and as having the latest styles of Poster Type, and all the smaller series of Fancy Type.¹

John Murphy and Co., printers to the Holy See and the Archbishop of Baltimore printed a beautiful and correct edition of the Roman Ritual in two colors.

The Lucas Brothers furnished printers with every article for a complete printing office, including black and fancy inks, card and hand presses and every other article pertaining to the printing business.²

John P. Piet and Co., - Publishers, Booksellers, Printers, Stationers, and Importers - ranked among the largest in the city. Public offices, insurance, banking, and other joint stock associations received special attention. They received orders for books, periodicals, and other articles to be imported. Their most prominent publication was the "Catholic Mirror."³

The establishment of John P. Des Forges was for more than a third of a century the chief rendezvous of the literary citizens of Baltimore. Books of all kinds were bought and exchanged.⁴

The Kreuzer Brothers, Publishers, Booksellers, and Dealers, was established in 1860 by Joseph and Christopher Kreuzer. Joseph Kreuzer died in 1874, leaving the business to his brother, Christopher. The house published all kinds of church books and the "Katholische Volkszeitung" a weekly Catholic paper that circulated throughout the United States and Europe.⁵

The T. Newton Kurtz house was engaged in the importation and manufacture of blank books and general stationery, also in book-binding, printing, and lithographing. The enterprise was started as far back as 1843 by Mr. T. Newton Kurtz.⁶

The establishment of C. W. Schneidereith, a native of Prussia, was in 1849. In the first half century the firm did a considerable business in foreign language printing, especially in German and Hebrew.⁷ During the eighties the founders sons joined the business and the firm name was changed to C. W. Schneidereith & Sons.

The McGinnis Harrow, patented October 11th, 1875. On entirely new principles adapted to all purposes of harrows. The teeth are steel, diamond shape, 1 1/2 in. broad by 5/8 in. thick, sharp front and rear, and at the end. Reversible - rear edge to the front when dulled in front. Adjustable to any slant to suit the work. It never has to be raised for disgorgement. Cleans itself. Renovates sod-bound meadows, cultivates wheat and corn, broadcast. More thoroughly prepares soil for planting in one going over, than two workings with other harrows. Warranted more effective and durable than any harrow in use. L. H.
