Where commission, apparently acting within the scope of its authority, awards compensation and facts are alleged to deprive it of jurisdiction, the burden of establishing such facts is upon party asserting them. It does not follow from decedent's being engaged in longshore work that he was employed as a stevedore or in maritime work, or that he was on the navigable waters of harbor at time of his death. Jurisdiction of commission not open to collateral attack. Taylor v. Ramsay Co., 139 Md. 123.
