

1809

[To the People of Maryland of all political and religious denominations. Annapolis? 1809, broadside.

Referred to in a piece in the Annapolis Maryland Gazette, Aug. 16, 1809, signed: A Layman, and headed: Church Petition. "A handbill has been lately issued and distributed by some unfriendly soul, who ... has issued forth a tissue of unjust and indelicate reflections on both petitioners and grantors. The address is to the People of Maryland of all political and religious denominations ... It concludes ... "that they who tolerate intolerants render themselves guilty of their crimes"." The handbill insinuated that the purpose of the so-called Church Bill was to create an established church.

The second instalment, printed the following week and headed: On the Church Bill and Quakers' Petition, refers to the "Episcopal Church Bill." See item 755.
