

MR. SCOTT OF WASHINGTON, D. C., Prop. of Scott's Lunch Room.

The editor wishes to call special attention to the ability, thrift and economic spirit of Mr. Scott of Washington, D. C., proprietor of the largest and most well-equipped lunch room in that city, which is situated at the corner of 7th and T Sts., N. W., Mr. Scott is a most congenial and polite gentleman, and is ever on the alert.

His lunch room occupies about a half a square. It is admirably furnished, having beautiful marble tables, marble counters, marble steam tables, mirrors and the other requisites of a well-fitted lunch room. A remarkable fact, is that he is so careful in his attention to a customer spending 5c as to one spending a dollar.

Both white and colored may be seen seated at his tables without the least agitation. "Courtesy and Politeness" is the trade mark of his waitresses, who I might insert, are attired in becoming uniforms.

Mr. Scott anticipates making an addition to his business in the near future.

The Editor wishes further to compliment his gradual progress and wishes him success in his new improvements.

F. MORRIS MURRAY

F. Morris Murray, Secretary and manager (as well as founder) of the Murray Brothers Printing Co., Inc., is a striking example of what success our young men are capable of, when they concentrate their efforts and energy along business lines. Beginning business over eighteen years ago with a capital of less than ten dollars (a toy outfit) through perseverance and hard work the firm has built up a large business, employing over twenty employees. Raymond H. Murray, Norman D. Murray and F. Morris Murray comprise the corporation.
