

HERE is no word a man can borrow
To ease his hear of present sorrow,
And the sorrowful heart can never wait
For the scar that will heal it soon or late;
But the earth sods down, and the earth is plowed,
And the earth turns green, and the bird is loud.

You can seek, you can pray, and the seeking is good,
For there is no way where there is no would,
And parhaps some son of another reaping
Will bring a promise for a longer keeping;
But this we know, and have always known:
That the grain will grow--where the seed is sown...
