

English text of the charter appeared in the 1635 Relation, and that the Brown/Griswold/Jones versions probably were printed in the late 1630s or 1640s.

We are grateful to the Wroth family, in particular L. Kinvin Wroth, Dean of the University of Maine School of Law, and his brother William Wroth, who encouraged us to reprint this least known, yet highly significant, essay by their father. The introductory essay on the Maryland charter first appeared in a newspaper supplement published by the Paul VI Institute for the Arts for the Maryland Conference, and is reprinted here, slightly expanded and in annotated form, with the permission of the Institute and its director, the Reverend Michael diTeccia Farina. We are also indebted to William E. Culen, Printing Buyer, Department of General Services, and E. John Schmitz & Sons, Inc., who not only expedited the production of this pamphlet, but also applied their considerable expertise in printing to ensure the timely delivery of a carefully crafted product.
